NASPA '86

STUDENT AFFAIRS

An American Tradition

WELCOME TO WASHINGTON, D.C. AND TO NASPA '86!

Dear NASPA Colleague:

This is an exciting year to be at our national conference. In this, the sixty-eighth year of our association's existence, we are taking a significant step. By moving our central office to Washington, D.C., we will be able to coordinate more effectively our activities with other national associations and thus will be in a better position to influence national education policies.

To place this move in some perspective, let me quickly review the history of our association. The first meeting took place in January 1919, when six men, Scott Goodnight, E. E. Nicholson, Robert Rienow, Leslie Reed, M. W. Smallwood and L. A. Strauss, gathered to discuss the issues and problems of the day. Out of that informal gathering grew the National Association of Deans and Advisors of Men (NADAM).

By 1951, NADAM institutional members numbered 201, and more than 200 representatives attended the annual conference. That conference effected an important change. To reflect more accurately the nature of the association's work, the membership voted to become the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators. With the change of name came other significant changes. In 1953, Armour J. Blackburn overcame local prejudices at the conference site to become the first black to attend an annual conference. In 1956, a small group of women student affairs professional attending a NASPA conference endured a — shall I say — "less-than-polite" reception by association members.

These "firsts" opened the doors for others. Today women and minorities are well represented in our membership and consistently provide inspiring leadership. Personally, I don't have to look far for evidence that we have indeed come a long way. And this year we'll see the gavel passed to Judy Chambers, the third woman to hold the highest office in the organization.

But all of us — men, women, minority, white — can look back with pride on the role that our organization and its members have played in the development of student affairs as a profession. In 1937, NADAM members helped formulate the "Student Personnel Point of View." In the Sixties, NASPA members provided leadership in preparing the highly regarded "Statement of Student Rights and Responsibilities." And the NASPA Journal and the NASPA Monograph Series have made significant contributions to professional development and student affairs research.

As NASPA president my goals have been to strengthen an already strong organization by increasing membership and reaching out even more to our "life blood," our young professionals. I have tried to set our sights ever higher by endorsing our move to Washington and by preparing staff and membership for the new challenges and opportunities that we will face in this new arena. I have been proud to be your president and have tried to serve you well. I wish the very best to Judy, and pledge my continued support and commitment to her and to our fine organization. To the hundreds of NASPA members whom I've met and worked with during the last few months, I send a heartfelt "Thank you." As your president, I have learned first-hand what great people make us this great organization.

Best wishes for an inspiring conference.

Smoking is not permitted in Conference sessions. Thank you.

Attending For The First Time?

On Wednesday, April 2, 2:30 pm-3:30 pm a reception and orientation is scheduled for new professionals and first-time NASPA Conference participants in the Thoroughbred Room. This session will help you learn more about NASPA and the '86 Conference.

Recreation Opportunities

Guests of the Washington Hilton can take advantage of the exclusive Racquet Club. With lighted, championship caliber Har-Tru tennis courts, the Racquet Club is the ideal place for an exhilarating workout or relaxing play.

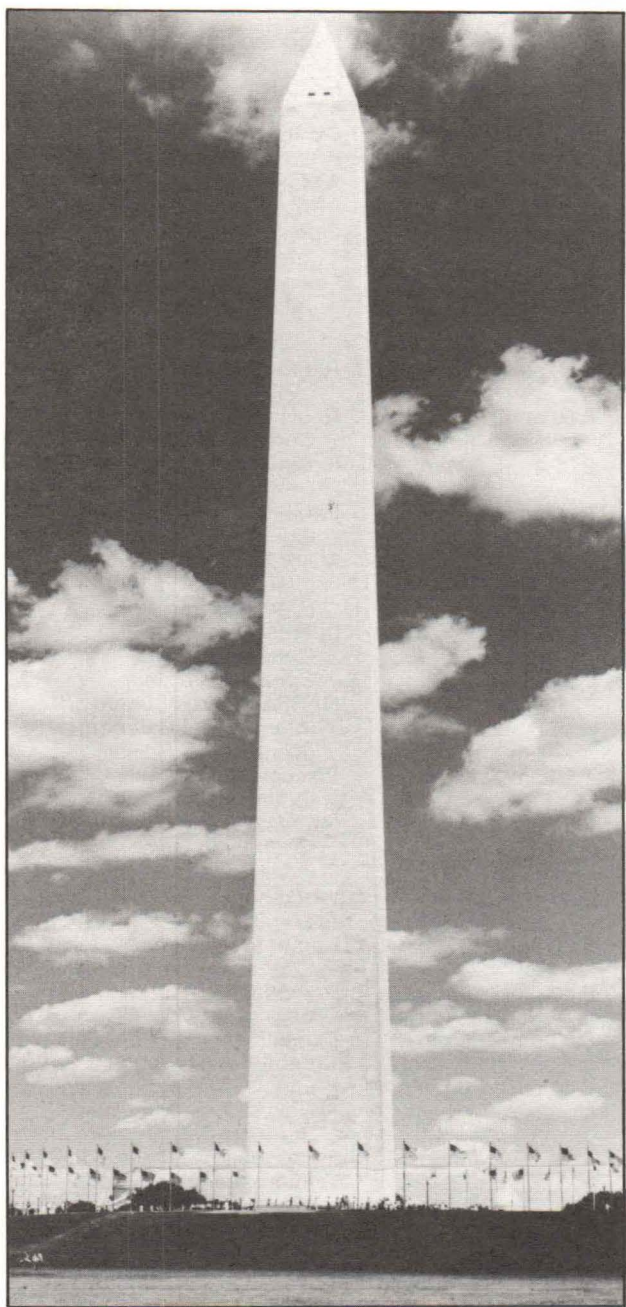

With weight and exercise rooms, Finnish saunas, jacuzzi whirlpool, shuffleboard courts and jogging courses, there are recreational opportunities for those of any shape or age. There are bicycle rentals available for short sightseeing or even shopping trips.

NASPA participants can take advantage of an early morning stretch class offered at 7:00 am in the Thoroughbred Room Thursday, April 3, and Friday, April 4.

The Annual Business Meeting

NASPA holds one meeting each year in which institutional members can participate in Association business at the national level. It is the business meeting convened at each annual conference. This year's meeting is scheduled for Friday, April 4, 3:30 pm in the International Ballroom. This is the only conference event scheduled in this time block.

Designation of proxies shall be in writing and received by the Executive Director no later than the official opening day of the Annual Conference. Proxies shall be Voting Delegates or Professional Affiliates who shall cast no more than one proxy each.

THE PROGRAM

The conference begins with the opening reception and keynote address on Wednesday afternoon. Following Thursday morning's major speaker, the first interest sessions will occur. In the afternoon, two more interest session time blocks will run concurrently with five workshops. Friday morning will also include a major speaker and another block of interest sessions with the afternoon offering a choice of five workshops or 12 interest sessions, all concluded in time for registrants to attend the annual NASPA business meeting. The program will conclude on Saturday when participants will have a choice of attending interest sessions in two morning time blocks.

INTEREST SESSIONS

All located on the Concourse Level (adjacent to Registration, Hospitality, Exhibits, and Placement), the 84 interest sessions will carry out the conference theme: "Student Affairs: An American Tradition." Each of the interest sessions is part of one of the four program tracks within the theme and is noted in the program listing with the appropriate track abbreviation and symbol next to the interest session: Student Services (SS), Developmental Issues (DI), Critical Issues (CI), and Professional Issues (PI). The number of sessions in each track is proportionate to the number of program proposals submitted in that track.

The Program Committee was successful in attracting a wide variety of programs with participants from both within and outside our profession. All types of institutions and settings are represented and we are especially excited about the fact that a number of students will be serving as program presenters.

Another NASPA first this year is the sale of audio cassette tapes of interest sessions. The presenters of those sessions marked with a microphone next to the session listing have agreed to having their session recorded through the services of Visual Aids Electronics (VAE). Cassettes of these sessions will be sold at the VAE table near the registration area on the Concourse Level and will be available shortly after each session concludes. The sales table will be open from noon until 7:00 pm on Thursday and from 8:00 am until 5:00 pm on Friday and Saturday. VAE will sell the tapes for $8 each with special rates of five for $35 and ten for $60. All tapes will be guaranteed and VAE will honor requests for tapes for a period of one year after the conference. VAE will accept cash, personal checks, mail orders, Visa, MasterCard, and American Express. NASPA is excited about this new service which will allow conference participants to review a session, purchase a recording of a session missed while attending another session, share an exciting presentation with colleagues back home, and eliminate note taking and the aggravation of personal recording.

WORKSHOPS

Located in some of the Park Suites on the Terrace Level, the ten workshops will offer conference participants the opportunity to explore certain selected topics in depth in lieu of attending shorter interest sessions. THE NATURE OF THE WORKSHOPS AND THE SIZE OF THE PARK SUITES WILL LIMIT ATTENDANCE AT EACH WORKSHOP TO 30 PEOPLE. ADMISSION WILL BE ON A FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED BASIS UNTIL ALL SEATS ARE FILLED. YOU ARE THEREFORE ENCOURAGED TO ARRIVE EARLY.

CASE STUDY COMPETITION

The case study competition features teams of two graduate students from Student Affairs preparation programs throughout the country. The team members will be presented with prepared cases on Wednesday. Beginning at 9:00 on Thursday morning the teams will respond to their cases. Two inquisitors will question the responses of the teams. Thus, the competition enables graduate students to defend a position under challenge from current practitioners or professors of student affairs.

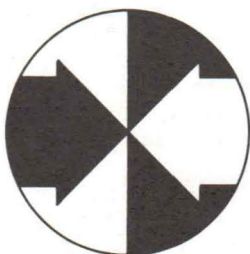

Each team will compete for 45 minutes. After the competition has concluded, a winning team will be selected by the inquisitors. The winning students will receive a NASPA Certificate of Achievement and a subscription to the Jossey-Bass, Inc. series New Directions in Student Services. The preparation program of the winning team will receive the "Arno Nowotny Graduate Student Case Study Award" in the form of a plaque.

Competition is open to all graduate students who are registered for the Conference. The coordinator of the case study competition is Dr. Leila Moore, Visiting Associate Professor of College Student Personnel at Bowling Green State University.

NATIONAL BOARD FOR CERTIFIED COUNSELORS

NASPA has been approved by the National Board for Certified Counselors to offer continuing education credits for programs at the Annual Conference. The interest sessions that are available for credit are listed on a sheet in your conference packet. A registration table for this program will be located in the Conference Registration area, Concourse Level, Lobby.

"A View From Washington"*
Sam Donaldson
ABC News, Chief White House Correspondent
Anchorman, ABC "World News Tonight — Sunday"

Four sets of national conventions and Presidential campaigns, Watergate and its aftermath, the American hostage crisis in Iran — Sam Donaldson has quite a bit of reporting under his belt. Now add to that list five Presidential administrations and you have a pretty good idea of what has been keeping him so busy.

After joining ABC News as a Washington-based correspondent in 1967, Mr. Donaldson's primary duty was coverage of the Senate and House of Representatives. He was assigned to the Carter campaign in January, 1976, traveling on most of the candidate's trips and reporting the daily activities. He was the first reporter to interview the 1976 Democratic Presidential nominee immediately following his acceptance speech — repeating his 1972 accomplishment of securing the initial interview with Senator George McGovern. At present, he is actively engaged as the Chief White House Correspondent for ABC News as well as an anchorman for World News Tonight — Sunday and a regular on This Week with David Brinkley. Additionally, he often substitutes for Ted Koppel on Nightline.

Mr. Donaldson has distinguished himself covering several major stories for ABC News, including the Iranian crisis, the Watergate scandal and subsequent impeachment proceedings, and all major Congressional activity. In 1975, he was the correspondent and co-producer of the ABC News Close-Up, Washington Regulators: How They Cost You Money. In addition to being one of ABC's four floor reporters for the 1972, 1976 and 1980 national nominating conventions, he was part of the ABC News team that reported the results of the 1972 election and the midterm election in 1974.

In 1971, Mr. Donaldson left Washington to take on a three month assignment for ABC News in Vietnam. Returning to Washington in 1972, he followed Senator Hubert Humphrey in his quest for the Democratic Presidential nomination and was one of the ABC News correspondents to question Senators Humphrey and McGovern in the third of their debates in June, 1972. During the 1968 political campaigns, Mr. Donaldson worked as a field correspondent, reporting on both the Democratic and Republican conventions. In the 1970 midterm elections, he shared anchorman duties for ABC News coverage with Howard K. Smith and Frank Reynolds.

"Equity and Excellence in

Mary Frances Berry
Professor of History
Senior Fellow in the Institute for the Study of Educational Policy, Howard University

Dr. Berry has climbed through the ranks of the world of academia and law to be one of the few Blacks — and few women — in a world long locked in a white male stranglehold. Now at the top of her profession, Mary Frances Berry studies and teaches history and law in a bit more realistic, and more sobering fashion than the traditional sugar-coated versions we all grew up with.

In addition to her teaching, she serves as a Commissioner on the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights and was Vice Chairperson from 1980-82. She served as U.S. Assistant Secretary for Education in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Dr. Berry has held faculty appointments at six major universities. In addition to doctorate and juris doctorate degrees, she has received ten honorary degrees in recognition of her outstanding work.

"Badges, Guns, Uniforms/ Nikes, Shorts, Books — Posi- tive Outcomes of an Inte- grated Training Program for Law Enforcement and Resi- dence Hall Staff"

Residence Life and University Law Enforcement personnel often share common goals but encounter difficulty in articulating these goals to one another and in developing cooperative methods of achieving these goals. Issues of image, territoriality, and authority often interfere with staff working effectively on common issues.

A series of joint training programs and exchange of personnel that involve staff from all levels within the two areas have been successfully implemented at the University of South Carolina. Results include reduced crime, improved relationships, and proactive approaches to planning and problem solving by senior level and front line staff members.

"AIDS in the Residence Halls — A Growing Concern"

The likelihood of identified AIDS cases in residence halls will increase as the disease spreads within and beyond high-risk groups and current locations. With public reaction to AIDS victims in school systems, it is essential that campuses address critical issues that will allow a humane response to the victim and those around him/her. This presentation will discuss considerations for policy, procedure, and educational programs that maximize the potential for achieving desired outcomes.

"Crisis Management: A Pragmatic Model"

The increasing number, variety, and complexity of personal crisis situations on many campuses have necessitated the development of clear, precise, and well-coordinated emergency procedures. This presentation will review and document the need on one campus and share with the participants the crisis management model which resulted. Emphasis will be given to clarity of purpose, areas of responsibility, selection and training of crisis coordinators, administrative decisions, communication links, support systems, and assessment. Handouts will be available.

"Learning Disabled Student Services: Strategies for Forming Partnerships with the Academic Community"

As more learning disabled students seek a post-secondary degree, student services professionals will need to work with academic affairs administrators to ensure that successful classroom accommodations are available. The appropriateness of those accommodations is currently a topic of debate at many colleges and universities. Student services professionals and academic affairs administrators are now exploring the role each should take as the debate continues over Section 504 applications in higher education. This program will be a review of strategies several campuses are now utilizing in their effort to provide academic assistance to students with learning disabilities.

Presenters:

"Student Affairs Administration in the Urban Setting: Is there a Prototype?"

The comprehensive urban university is a product of post World War II expansion in American higher education. There has been considerable discussion recently about the mission of student affairs administration at institutions of higher education in urban settings. Some debate has ensued regarding the range of services that should be provided at an urban university. Much of this discussion has centered around whether or not there are basic programs/services/activities which are essential regardless of the nature of the institution.

This program will feature remarks by chief student affairs officers currently serving at major institutions in urban settings. Audience participation will be encouraged to produce further discussion regarding current topics of interest to student affairs officers at urban institutions.

"Bulimia and Anorexia Nervosa on the Campus: An Integrated Response by Student Affairs and Health Services Professionals to an Increasing Health Problem"

Along with clothes, stereos, and school books, approximately 14-20% of college students also bring to campus the eating disorders of bulimia and anorexia nervosa. Eating disorders often result in severe health problems, social withdrawal, poor academic performance, and stormy relationships with peers and family. This presentation showcases a videotape produced in response to concerns about a more effective and comprehensive response to bulimia and anorexia nervosa. In addition, strategies will be presented which increase general understanding of eating disorders, encourage early case finding and referral, and promote healthy attitudes toward eating, weight, and self-image.

"Partners in Pursuit of Excellence: Quality through Involvement"

This program will examine the commitment of one institution to enhance the quality of education by providing for greater student involvement in learning through cooperative efforts between student affairs and academic affairs. The areas of cooperative endeavor to be explored include: admissions, with emphasis on the initial entry process including orientation; advising, delineating the joint responsibility of student

“We Are the World”: Orientation in the Liberal Arts Tradition”

Many liberal arts institutions view their campus as a separate community striving to identify their place in the world. Involvement in Learning provided student affairs professionals with the opportunity to re-examine the programs they offer in orienting new students. Community members frequently view their position in higher education as different from the more traditional institution. "In Loco Parentis: Recasting a Tradition"

Prior to the '60's, in loco parentis was prevalent on most campuses and student affairs administrators were expected to assume many parental roles. A number of factors and circumstances then changed the role of student affairs work with an unforeseen secondary result: professionals became more legalistic and detached, posing as theoretical specialists rather than persons actively engaged in the lives of students.

This session will examine the more recent societal shift whereby values and religious beliefs are being debated and imposed on students; laws and policies regarding alcohol, drugs and one's personal safety have been dictated at the federal and state levels; recent litigation pertaining to responsibilities of student organizations, individual administrators and institutions; and other social changes are having major impacts and expectations upon universities and campus administrators. These societal demands may be forcing campus and student personnel administrators more "back to the basics" and a recasting of Student Affairs Traditions — In Loco Parentis.

"Destructive Cults: Campus Challenges and Responses"

The presence of destructive cults in and around college campuses presents several challenges to the student affairs administrator. While many larger institutions budget funds and assign personnel to provide staff development activities, professional and personal enhancement is perhaps even more critical for staff at small schools who frequently are not able to establish the network and support system available to others.

The provision of budget support as a high priority will be stressed, as will the use of on-campus resources and the pooling of resources among several institutions for a particular development activity. "Beyond the Ivory Tower:
 Community Involvement as a
 Dimension of Student Involvement"

Recently, many student personnel workers have been raising questions of the responsibility of the university and students to the community at large. In fact, some politicians are even calling for mandatory national youth service. The words "student activism" have taken on new meaning as more students have become involved in community and volunteer activities. This workshop will focus on community responsibility as a means for student development using Georgetown University's 500-plus volunteer organization, community-oriented special housing, and academic credit option as models for this type of student involvement.

Even with the multitude of student development theories that exist, many departments within divisions of student affairs operate without a consistent philosophical foundation. Presenters will introduce and discuss the principles of wellness, community development, and programming as they combine to form a unique model of student development. A taxonomy will be presented that may be applied to wellness and can be used to ascertain issues of concern to students and staff.

"Initiating an Integrated Student Recruitment Program"

Lehigh University has implemented an admission outreach program to penetrate historically successful geographic areas more deeply and target national "horizon" areas. By integrating efforts of alumni and students, the program provides a model to increase quality and diversity of candidates for admission and to insure a better "match" between candidates and the institution. In an increasingly competitive market, the program provides a means to integrate resources (alumni and students), target efforts, and intentionally impact the nature of the freshman class.

"The Chief Student Affairs Officer: Identifying, Responding to, and Balancing Constituencies"

The effective chief student affairs officer must be astute in identifying, responding to, and balancing a wide variety of constituencies, both internal and external. Several chief student affairs officers will share their observations regarding who the chief student affairs officer's constituencies are, whether they are constant or changing, how to respond successfully to them, and then suggest ways to balance the responses in the midst of a high volume of competing demands for resources and attention.

Address:

"The Greater Future of America"

Richard D. Lamm

Governor of Colorado

First elected in 1974 at age 39, Democrat Richard Lamm is serving his third term as Governor of Colorado. Having served as workhand, deckhand, lumberjack, C.P.A., attorney, professor, and member of the Colorado House of Representatives, his credo is summed up in the phrase "era of limits," a belief that the most important task of government is to prevent the earth's resources and wealth from being used up. One reason for his popularity is that he expresses as deep a mistrust of the federal government as any conservative Republican.

Governor Lamm opposes overpopulation, land development, and the use of high technology to prolong life at great expense. It was on this last issue that he aroused a national furor in 1984 by saying that certain old people had "a duty to die." The Governor is the author of five books, including Megatraumas: America at the Year 2000.

"Orientation: Some Considerations for Diverse Student Populations"

The issue of providing student services and programming for diverse student populations is becoming critical for a majority of colleges and universities across the country. Orienting such students to the institution in an effort to ensure their greatest possible success is equally critical. The concept of orientation is less than exciting to the traditional student; how much less important it seems to the harried part-time working student, the returning mother, the minority or international student with different cultural heritage. How can we make the information more palatable and more easily assimilated? What are some of the special considerations around which programs can be developed for these special groups? This program will present the recent efforts to answer these questions by a staff concerned with diverse student needs at Florida International University, a non-traditional institution when it first opened in 1972.

"Retention Data and Programs for Commuter Students"

This program highlights the results of a retention survey sent to 50 institutions identified by the National Clearinghouse as having a large number of commuter students. Survey respondents provided actual, estimated data in describing their commuter population through the use of Stewart and Rue's "independent"/"dependent", "traditional"/"non-traditional" and "full-time"/"part-time" variables. In addition to the retention data, the presenters will identify and discuss special programs offered to beginning, persisting commuter students and list any special instruments they used to describe commuter student characteristics.

"High Ability Students: No Help Wanted/Needed?"

Excellence in higher education has been the topic of several major national studies and reports. Every institution strives for excellence, and a main element of that pursuit is the talented, high ability student. Yet, how involved are student affairs programs and personnel in the development of these exceptional students in whom the institution has a significant financial investment? Are these students as self-assured, satisfied, and successful as presumed? This presentation will focus on the recruiting and retention of high ability students. A review of the literature and research identifying the concerns and interests of this group will suggest a profile from which to initiate action. Special programs currently in progress at several institutions will be presented, emphasizing those which engage faculty and community leaders. An opportunity for discussion and sharing of programs will be provided.

"Educational Discipline — From Concept to Practice"

A comparison of legalistic (reactive) versus developmental (proactive) modes of addressing student conduct will be presented with emphasis given to the learning process. Behavioral theories supporting the concept of educational discipline will be reviewed and viable alternatives to traditional methods of dealing with student misconduct will be explored. An opportunity will be afforded participants to translate behavioral and developmental theory into practice via a series of case studies and the development of creative sanctions.

"Student Violence on the College Campus: A Growing Trend?"

At one time, only urban campuses reported student-to-student violence, and those incidents were sporadic, often isolated acts of a very few individuals. A recent survey of Towson State students — both residents and commuters — revealed that nearly 64% of the respondents said they had been the victims of physical assault, the vast majority of those having been perpetrated by other students on the university campus. This prompted TSU to survey the NASPA II schools on student-to-student violence and to bring the results to NASPA's annual conference.

"Survive and Thrive as a Re-Entry Adult Student: Getting Back to Basics with the Non-Traditional Student"

The adult student is a "different breed." Those not fitting the traditional student profile need to have some basic point of entry in the college/university which many times looks to them like a closed system, not intended for their use. This program focuses on defining the re-entry adult student population, raising professional awareness of the adult perspective, and demonstrating the information and resources an adult services office can provide in addressing adult needs.

"Suicide Intervention: Legacy of the 'Second Wind' "

Suicide intervention is a dynamic process, involving at least two parties: the person in conflict and the helper. Both individuals have needs, fears, misconceptions, and abilities which must be addressed. Participants will be actively involved in their personal development through the exchange of information and challenged to draw upon his/her professional experience, information provided herein, and natural human instinct in a simulated experience.

"The Superwoman Syndrome — A New Fairy Tale for Women Students?"

A popular television commercial boldly proclaims "I can bring home the bacon, fry it up in the pan, and let my husband know how it feels to be a man, cause I'm a woman." Is this a true picture of the modern "superwoman", or is it the great myth of the 1980's? This program will explore the validity of the superwoman syndrome to determine if it is, in fact, a modern fairy tale which educators are teaching students.

"The University Town: A Blessing or a Curse?"

The purpose of this presentation is to focus attention on universities and small towns working together to solve mutual problems. Emphasis is placed on university-city police and government relations and how these entities respond conjointly to problems wrought by the peculiarities of the university/college presence in Small Town, USA. Given all that we know and believe to be real about Small Town, USA, are we prepared to sing its praises? Has it achieved the greatness implied in the fantasies of the apostles who view it as Utopia? What really happens in Small Town, USA, when it is abruptly transformed into Small College Town, USA? Do city officials have concerns that might go unnoticed if not for the presence of a college or university? What role should the chief student affairs officer assume in resolving these concerns? What really happened in small towns i.e., Normal, Illinois; Manhattan, Kansas; West Lafayette, Indiana; Kalamazoo, Michigan; and Morgantown, West Virginia during fall, 1984? Why? What lessons can be gleaned from these experiences that will enable student personnel to appreciate better the dilemma of College Town, USA?

"Leadership A Multiethnic Approach"

The purpose of this workshop is to promote a cognitive understanding of how leadership education can assist in mainstreaming minority students at predominately white campuses. The importance of involving minority students in leadership development and policy recommending activities is two-fold: it reinforces the institution's valuing of minority students and it provides peer support as a factor in student persistence. The workshop design maximizes the contribution of individuals by providing opportunities for reflection and participation.

"Retention: It's Not My Responsibility, It's Our Responsibility"

An institutional response to retention concerns will be presented and discussed.

Too often we identify a problem, appoint a committee, or assign it to a specific individual or department and expect it to be solved. This presentation will illustrate a conscious effort to decentralize responsibility for addressing retention of students in various grade levels, colleges, and other identifiable categories. The focus of the discussion will be on promoting interaction with institutional research, faculty, and student affairs staff for purposes of developing meaningful data, strategies, and implementation of programs. This approach has resulted in a meaningful reduction in attrition for a variety of student populations on the campus of Ohio University over the past five years. Just as critical has been the marked improvement in working relationships between and among the faculty and staff of the institution.

"The Painful Catharsis of a Retiring Student Leader"

This program will focus on the disturbing feelings of having been used and abandoned which many retiring student leaders report. Included with these feelings is often a report of poor academic performance, lost scholarships, difficulty in obtaining a job or a graduate school placement, and additional financial burdens.

During the past 15 years post secondary institutions have involved students in just about every facet of college life including, in many cases, active participation on a wide variety of college committees and membership on the Board of Governors. A number of purposes have been served by this trend towards direct student involvement. However, it might very well be time to re-evaluate this phenomenon from a vantage point that considers the overall effectiveness of active student involvement and the impact that this new responsibility is having on the lives of student leaders.

Comparisons are drawn between conventional images of the student affairs profession and the actual experiences of the practitioners. Differences are noted between the "new" and the "established" professional, between men and women, between public and private institutions, among the different NASPA regions around the country, as well as other comparisons.

The epidemic proportions of suicide today necessitates preparedness. Because of the possible clustering and suggestibility of a self-inflicted fatality, a well-planned and thoughtful response may be crucial toward abating further trauma. "Back to the Basics: Designing a Co-Curricular Model Based on the Liberal Arts Mission"

Student affairs departments have often built their models on developmental theory and then wondered why it was so hard to receive validation and support from the academic area. The role of student affairs is to support and complement the educational mission of the college, using our knowledge of developmental theories to enhance the experience of students. At Bradford College, a model for the co-curriculum has been designed built on the objectives to be found within the Bradford Plan for a Practical Liberal Arts Education. This curriculum reaffirms a commitment to the liberal arts education. The co-curricular model supports these goals and provides structure for allowing students to choose their own areas of growth.
